

Remote Viewer

Graham Gussin

£9.95

In September 2001, the artist Graham Gussin undertook a journey to a place called Askja, in what is known as the 'lunar desert' of Iceland.

As Gussin was travelling through this remote and featureless but strangely beautiful landscape, a remote viewer – an individual with paranormal abilities who has been trained to see over great distances – was asked to track his movements and pinpoint his location.

This publication provides a further document of the project, featuring film stills, installation photographs, and other behind-the-scenes material.

Interview and discussion with Graham Gussin, Chris Darke and Steven Bode
