

Urban Agriculture Growing Care

Blair Cunningham

£10.00

Urban Agriculture Growing Care is a limited edition boxed poster publication.

As a post-industrial city, Glasgow has a glut of derelict land. Over recent years the city has witnessed a growth in community gardens. These places and the groups that maintain them are playing a significant role in re-shaping both the city's landscape and its relationship with food and community.

Blair Cunningham has documented this grass-roots regeneration across the city, his publication represents a glimpse of another Glasgow, one that generates new forms of value in places and people beyond neoliberalism.

The publication takes the form of a double-sided print using a selection of photographs to vividly depict the changes to post-industrial Glasgow's land-use, in the process mapping the city's community gardens.

This artwork is derived from a larger body of research by Dr John Crossan, Profs Andrew Cumbers, Robert McMaster and Deirdre Shaw at the University of Glasgow, which considers community gardening as an example of a more caring city.
