Shame

£20.00

Reprint of this classic title

From shaming and shamefulness to shame-avoidance and shamelessness, the experience of shame influences our social behaviours, decision-making abilities, and desires.

Shame determines what we show and what we hide. And yet, as an emotion that begs for its own concealment, what is the structure and appearance of shame? How does shame interact with the realm of the visible, and where does it surface in visual culture?

In this extensive historical and contemporary analysis of shame and its power, artist Andrea Büttner probes the definitions and representations of shame.

This book includes close readings of Sigmund Freud's writings on play and fantasy, challenges theoretical approaches to Andy Warhol's queer performativity on film, and frames Dieter Roth's representations of shame in his writing and moving image work.
