

Richard Long Dartmoor

£30

This unique flip-book allows the reader to mix and contrast images of landscape photography taken by Richard Long during an eight day walk in Dartmoor, Devon, 2005. Each page is cut into three sections to enable the reader to see the horizon, middle-ground or foreground of the same or different pages.

Born in Bristol, England in 1945, Richard Long uses walking as a form of art. For Long, walking provides an ideal means for exploring relationships between time, distance, geography and measurement. These are then recorded as maps, photographs or text works, using whichever form is most appropriate for that particular idea.

'I consider my landscape works to inhabit the rich territory between two ideological positions, namely that of making 'monuments' or conversely, of 'leaving only footprints.'
