

Plastic Christophe Cherix & John Tremblay

£7

Based on an exhibition curated by Christophe Cherix and John Tremblay at the Print Room of Geneva, this volume presents an overview of the use of vacuum-formed plastic in art of the last forty years.

The process, by nature industrial and originally associated with packaging and advertising, consists of making an imprint of a form by placing a heated plastic sheet on a mold and subjecting it to vacuum pressure.

If plastic was brought to the public's attention in the 1940s by the well-known mark tupperware, it is vacuum-forming's rationality and low cost which has long appealed to artists starting with Claes Oldenburg, and Craig Kaufman in the 1960s, up to Jim Isermann, Fabrice Gygi, and Seth Price today.

Christophe Cherix is curator of the Print Room of Geneva's Musée d'art et d'histoire. John Tremblay is an artist living and working in New York.
